Decide on the format

You can publish your Ph.D. in several ways: as a book, as a journal article, as a series of journal articles, as a conference paper, as an internal university document, or as a specialist society publication.

Publishing it as a book

Commercial publishers will not publish your Ph.D., but you can self-publish it. There are several companies offering this service that you can find on the Internet. If you decide to make your Ph.D. into a book, you should rewrite it, focusing on the story rather than the research.

Writing a proposal

Your proposal should be concise and to the point. Remember that an editor will have other people within the business to persuade. Make it easy for them by being realistic and market-focused. Your proposal should identify: the subject particulars of the book, the intended audience, how you intend to structure your book, and what your book will offer that others do not. Provide a single sample chapter if you can.

Choosing a publisher

Choose a publisher carefully. You can consult directories such as the Directory of Publishing or The Writers' and Artists' Yearbook. It would be a good idea to discuss your proposal with colleagues and your supervisor. Find out what experience they have had with various publishers, and whom they would recommend. Send your proposal to a named individual by email.

Publishing your Ph.D. as a journal article

If you decide that your Ph.D. would make a good journal article, please follow the suggestions on our Author Services website. These will take you through the process of choosing the right journal, submitting your article, and the whole publication process, right up to promoting your article after you have been successful.
